

Hudson Valley Transportation Management Center

Hawthorne, New York

The Hudson Valley Transportation Management Center is a multi-modal, multi-agency facility designed to integrate and manage the Intelligent Transportation System (ITS) infrastructure currently used in NY State DOT Region 8, which includes 7 counties just north of New York City. The facility includes a station for NY State Police Troop K, and subsequent to the 9/11 attacks the building was redesigned to include additional space for emergency operations centers for the NYS Emergency Management Office and Westchester County, as well as significant additional security features.

The HVTMC will collect and disseminate real-time traffic information, and be the critical link between transportation agencies, public safety agencies, media entities and the traveling public. Including a 911 call center, State Police dispatch and HELP truck operations center, it will also be the command center for incident response to conditions that impact traffic flow in Westchester County and the Hudson Valley. The project represents a unique collaboration of state and local agencies, to centralize and share all regional transportation, emergency and enforcement functions in one facility, resulting in a model of cooperation in support of public safety and efficiency. The building includes a display area with interactive exhibits to educate the public about ITS programs and benefits.
